Trina

Trina's knee seems to be doing "OK." She's finished therapy and on her own now. The weather causes some discomfort (the metal screw becomes cold making the knee ache) but she'll just have to figure out what works and what doesn't.

At this year's Haunted Barn she worked in the Jail House, Western Room and ran the time machine. She also did a bit of painting and hanging during construction but nothing really physical.

We're baking gingerbread this afternoon for her classes' houses to be decorated at school. She's taking classes for her Master's and teacher recertification programs.

Steve

Steve returned home the last week in September since the diving job opportunities in Louisiana have been reduced by the economy as well as seasonally. He arrived just in time to be pressed into service during the latter phase of construction on the Haunted Barn. He was in the Roaring '20s Room and chased people with the chainsaw when they came out. He's been a big help during construction and over the last two weeks with "tear down."

He's already getting antsy to return to diving work, either back in Louisiana or maybe on some jobs in the Midwest on the Great Lakes.

Mikey

Yesterday he finished his final on-the-road driving lesson and is scheduled to take the driving test in Bremerton over the Thanksgiving weekend. He's taking math and computer science classes at Olympic College but readily admits his heart just isn't in it. He's been job searching for the past several weeks but finding a job in this economic cycle will be difficult at best.

At the Haunted Barn he helped with construction, take down and was in the Western Room and operated the time machine.

Marilyn

Now that the Haunted Barn is over except for the closeout meeting, it's on to gingerbread houses. I believe we'll make houses for decoration in at least three school classrooms but beyond that it'll remain a surprise as to the total for now. We're already buying flour, shortening and syrup and we'll have the mixing and baking processes going full cycle as soon as Thanksgiving is over.

She's thinking about taking a weekend trip to Lincoln City so the boys can get in some boogie boarding time but I'm not certain that's going to happen with the holidays approaching so quickly.

Dave

Our state chapter sponsored the RS204 class last month in Bellevue and we have the RS202 class remaining. That will be my final class since I've been "kicked upstairs" to be chapter treasurer for next year. We have four classes set for 2009 including the RS205 class the tenth and eleventh of February.

I've been working weekends at the Haunted Barn during construction and was in the maze when we were operating. The last two weekends (and sometimes during the week) I've been taking things apart and cleaning up along with everyone else.
